2014 was one of the deadliest years for plane crashes: 22 accidents resulted in 992 fatalities. This proves that flying is no longer safe.

FALSE

The way we frame numbers is important. The missing piece of context here is that the number of flights keeps increasing, meaning that the number of deaths per million passengers or per million miles flown has drastically declined. An individual's chances of dying in a plane crash are 1 in 5 million. You are 1000 times more likely to die from choking or unintentional poisoning.

Listening to Mozart for twenty minutes a day temporarily increases your IQ.

FALSE

When this study was conducted, the researchers had one group listen to Mozart, while the other group - the control group - did nothing for twenty minutes. But doing nothing is not an adequate control for doing something, and it turns out that if you give people something to do – almost anything – it has pretty much the same short term effect on their IQ as listening to Mozart.

'Mass sexual assault' by refugees at New Year in Germany

FALSE

Reports of a mass sexual assault by refugees in Frankfurt on New Years Eve were fabricated according to German police. The right-wing newspaper Bild reported last week that 900 drunk refugees had been involved in the mass sex attack and quoted a number of witnesses and victims' testimony. However, few days later German police said that the accusations were "without foundation" and that they were investigating those who had made the alleged comments.
